

Ballard

PART
1
OF 2

Central Ballard

City of Seattle

Public Art & Culture Walking Tour Map

Welcome to Greater Ballard

Central Ballard, south of NW 57th Street, is home to a tight-knit community of artists, galleries, and performers. Annual cultural festivals and the monthly Art Walk, along with diverse public art sites, display the richness of Ballard's neighborhood identity.

Ballard today is a "city within a city" that retains its Scandinavian flavor with institutions such as the Nordic Heritage Museum. As residential development grew in the 1950s, the branch library and community center were built north of NW Market St.; a new municipal center is planned for midtown Ballard in 2003. From the industrial zones along its east and south edges (home to many artists' studios), to the fishing, recreational, and environmental activities at Salmon Bay, Chittenden Locks, and Shilshole Bay, Greater Ballard remains a thriving and diverse neighborhood.

Ballard began as home to the Duwamish community in a village called "Shilshole," meaning "somewhat tucked away." The first land claims were in 1852, with the new town incorporated in 1890, named after ship captain William Rankin Ballard. By the end of the 19th century, Ballard was the seventh largest city in Washington, with its population expanded by Scandinavian immigrants who worked in the mills and fishing fleets. The town boasted a bustling civic and business district, along with a high number of churches and saloons.

Ballard's need for public services prompted annexation to Seattle in 1907. Already a boat building center, Ballard's maritime role increased with the addition of the Fisherman's Terminal in 1913 and the completion of the Ship Canal and Government Locks in 1916. The Ballard Bridge, opened in 1917, brought streetcars and automobiles from greater Seattle. Trolley and interurban train lines also pushed the city boundaries north, to the coastline recreation area of Golden Gardens.

Central Ballard

- 1 Ballard Firehouse, 1911
Formerly Fire Station #18, this brick building with distinctive Dutch gables was designed by Seattle architects Charles Bebb and Louis Mendel.
5427 Russell Ave. NW at NW Market St.
- 2 Bergen Place, 1975
This covered triangular park with historical mural and community kiosk was designed by Alan Wylie and Charles Michael Svob; it was dedicated by King Herald V and Queen Sonja of Norway, to celebrate Ballard's Norwegian heritage.
Leary Ave. NW, 22nd Ave., NW Market St.
- 3 Untitled, 1978
Designed by Marvin T. Herard, die-cast concrete panels with semi-circular patterns are set in the sidewalk on both corners.
Ballard Ave. NW at NW Market St.
- 4 Untitled, 1978
In these cast bronze panels in the sidewalk, Larry Tate used raised texture to reveal abstract combinations of geometric and organic forms.
5410 Ballard Ave. NW
- 5 Centennial Bell Tower, 1976
The Ballard City Hall (1899) once stood on this site; the brick building with bell tower was demolished after the 1965 earthquake. The original bell was reinstalled at the dedication of the Ballard Historic District, which was attended by Norway's King Carl XVI Gustav.
NE corner of Ballard Ave. NW and 22nd Ave. NW
- 6 Granite Coelacanths, 1978
James Washington, Jr., a specialist in animal forms, created these small red granite bas-reliefs to commemorate the coelacanth, a prehistoric fish previously thought to be extinct.
NE corner of Ballard Ave. NW and 22nd Ave. NW
- 7 Catfish, 1978
This three-panel mosaic by Jack Ferrel is composed of one-inch square ceramic tiles. Four catfish appear to swim through the shallows of the sidewalk, passing by water lilies on their way north.
NE corner of Ballard Ave. and 20th Ave. NW
- 8 Stimson Mill Building, 1913
This brick building originally held the administrative offices for the largest lumber mill operation in Ballard. Designed in an Arts & Crafts style by nationally known architect Kirkland K. Cutter of Spokane, it now houses the studio and residence of a glass artist.
2116 Vernon Place at Shilshole Ave. NW
- 9 Untitled, 1978
In his cast-iron sidewalk panel, Donald W. Crabtree incorporated industrial shapes, such as a band saw and a flywheel.
5229 Ballard Ave. NW
- 10 Fish Out of Water, 1989
Mounted over the vehicle door on this warehouse building are Judith Caldwell's cast bronze disks that resemble fish diving in and out of water; alongside are seven carved plaques by Don Miles that represent Japanese symbols for water.
5115 Ballard Ave. NW
- 11 Ballard Avenue architecture
The business district grew up first along Ballard Avenue, with impressive commercial buildings in brick, iron, and concrete (along with smaller shops and warehouses) lining several blocks south of NW Market St. Begin with the 1893 Cors & Wegener Block (SE corner of 20th Ave.), which features Renaissance details and cast iron posts. Further north, the Dexter Horton National Bank (1903, 5228 Ballard Ave.) retains the name of the business in the mosaic floor of its classical doorway. At the corner of Vernon Place (5301 Ballard Ave.), Ballard Savings & Loan (1914) is a neoclassical gem with a cornucopia and "Thrifty" in its pediment sculpture. At 5323 Ballard Ave., the three-story G.B. Sanborn Block (1901) is the largest building on the Avenue, with its stone front in a Romanesque style. Built in the same year, the A.W. Preston Drug Store (5349 Ballard Ave.) has exceptional carving on its ornamental columns. The Mediterranean-style Vik Apartments (1926, 5425 Ballard Ave.) is the showpiece of a block that was largely built and redeveloped in the 1920s. Ballard Avenue was designated as a local and national Historic District in 1976.
- 12 Majestic Bay Theatre
This is the site of America's oldest continuously operating movie theatre. Opened in 1914 as the Majestic, it became the Roxy in 1929 and featured "talkies." Substantially remodeled with a new façade and multiple screens, the Majestic Bay reopened in 2000.
2044 NW Market Street
- 13 Carnegie Free Public Library, 1904
This is one of seven remaining Carnegie Libraries in Seattle. Designed in a Classical Revival style by Henderson Ryan, the two-story building is constructed of red brick with sandstone foundation and ornamental trim. The Carnegie Library was sold in 1965 and remains in private use.
2026 NW Market Street
- 14 Swedish Ballard Hospital
At the west entrance is Celebration of Life, a concrete sculpture depicting a doctor holding an infant, which was designed by Dr. Philip Joe King in 1986. On the 5th floor, near the elevators, is Mother and Child by the acclaimed Seattle artist George Tsutakawa. In 1955, Tsutakawa was commissioned to create this carved cedar relief by Dr. Edward T. Palmason and his wife Vivienne, in memory of their son Richard.
5300 Talman Ave. NW
- 15 Locks at Sunset, 1985
With this mural on the Bank of America branch, community artist Teitge provided a signature scene of Ballard's maritime life, the Chittenden Locks.
2026 56th St. NW
- 16 Ballard Public Library
To be replaced in 2003 with a new Ballard Library and Neighborhood Center, the present library has housed two significant sculptures since it opened in 1963. In Trees of Knowledge (located above the circulation desk) Archie Graber laminated together woods from every continent to express the interrelation of knowledge from all civilizations over time. On the west patio, Howard Duell's Of Sea and Life combines etched brass and water elements to depict scenes of aquatic life.

Outside the Library, note the sidewalk mosaic with the original name of 24th Ave. (Wilbert St.). In 1995, Benson Shaw was commissioned to implant reminders of the historic street grid at several intersections.
5711 24th Ave. NW
- 17 Ballard Boat, 1989
This collaborative work by artist Chuck Greening and architect Michael Canatsey sits in the west playground of the Ballard Community Center. Constructed of concrete, wood, bronze, and other found materials, the sculpture resembles a full-scale boat's prow emerging from the water, symbolizing Ballard's historic connection to fishing. Waves made with ceramic tiles and shells surround the hull at ground level.
6020 28th Ave. NW